Fresh from the fount of feeling.—Percival.

PICTURES PRECAUTIONARY.

I saw a pauper in the street, Begging from door to door,
A crust of bread, poor wretch! to eat, He seldom asked for more.
I said, "old man, I grieve to think That begging's your employ;"
"And why?" he said, "I learned to drink
When I was but a boy."

I saw a man within the stocks,
And rueful was his look,
The boys were pelting him with rocks, Yet all he had to brook;
A laughing stock to all—we think To him there was no joy.
"And why?" he said, "I learned to drink
When I was but a boy!"

I saw a man within the jail, All haggard and care worn,
His eye was sunk, his cheek was pale,
It made my spirits mourn;
And sympathy that seeks the link Of others grief or joy.
Ask'd why? he said, "I learn'd to drink
When I was but a boy!"

I saw a man within a crowd, Beneath the gallows tree,
The curses of the throng were loud Upon the felon. He With look from which the soul would shrink So fiend-like to destroy.
Said to the mob, "I learned to drink
When I was but a boy!"

I saw a man down in the ditch, I heard him groan with pain,
I gave him soon a helping hitch,
And raised him up again.
I asked him, "why below the brink?
Why caught in such a ploy?"
He said, "because I learned to drink
When I was but a boy!"

I saw a man, one winter's day, Befrozen, stiff, and cold.
He's made for home, but missed the way, Thus is the story told,
But whiskey was the cause, we think,
That did his life destroy:
I heard them say, he learned to drink,
When he was but a boy.

And is it thus, I woful said,
Of drinking this the end?
My very heart within me bled I said, "now heaven defend My own dear child from ruin's brink, While this, at least my joy Whate'er beside, he learned to drink Not, when he was a boy."

A SKETCH.

BY H. I. S.

I saw her in a crowd, there were gathered light hearts, and bright eyes beamed there, and there echoed the merry sound of innocent mirth, and the joyous laugh brought gladness even to the careworn heart and the grief-stricken one.

Among these joyous ones, was a fair girl whose clear open brow and deep blue eye, bespoke the depth and purity of that hidden fount—the heart. Upon her cheek sat the rose of health, and, as ever and anon was heard the cheerful tones of her musical voice, or the merry laugh, she appeared, as indeed she was, the gayest of the gay.— And chide her not sage moralist, for youthful gaiety—for how could a heart untouched by care, surrounded by the loved and the loving—just looking forth upon life, decked by youthful fancy with fairest flowers—how could such an one know aught else but gaiety?

Those whose bright hopes have been crushed—whose heart withered, confidence betrayed—who in short, have learned to look upon life with distrust—may well be averse to mirth—may withdraw from the world, into the deep recess of their own heart,—but, O! cast not a shade upon the youthful heart—chide not its mirth—whisper not to them of the thorns of life—for too soon will experience teach them the sad lesson,—leave them the free glad heart, unchecked in its youthful mirth, unrestrained in its youthful glee.

The scene is changed. Come with me to yonder curtained room, tread lightly, for all is still. Nature itself is but just waking into life—the hum of business has not yet disturbed the calm quiet of this holy hour. But see around the couch of suffering, bends with tearful eye, the anxious mother—there, too, are the weeping sisters —the father, and brothers;—there, too, is another—grief has touch his manly heart, and his countenance betrays the deep emotion of that heart. But why this change?

—wherefore are gathered this sorrowing group? Ah! 'tis around a dying bed—and the victim? Can it be that joyous one?— Yes, 'tis even so!—the burning, throbbing brain—the fevered cheek—the unearthly brightness of that eye—all tell that Death has another victim. Youth, friends, physicians, cannot snatch the loved one from the embrace of the ruthless tyrant Death!

They feel—they know it is so; yet how can they say "Farewell!"—how can they see that once bright eye closed forever in death!—and know that voice is forever hushed! Sorrowing ones, well may affection's tear be shed that such should be thine untimely fate!

Calm was the summer morning, and its balmy breath came fresh through the open window to fan the brow of the dying one.
The music of birds was heard, wafting as it were the fluttering, struggling spirit, from its prison house of clay to that blest region, where it may mingle with the seraphic choir, and tune that voice, whose melody has so often been heard on earth, to "nobler, sweeter strains." Yes, the hour has come —the struggle is over, and the heaven-born spirit wings its way to the spirit-land!— But has it fled and left that heavenly smile, the semblance of life, upon that countenance? They pause to catch her breath, but all is still—stillness—all save the stifled sob, the suppressed sigh of the bereaved ones. Aye, let the pent up feelings of the bursting heart find relief in tears! A mother weeps for her daughter—a brother mourns a sister gone—a sister refuses to be comforted for the loss of the playmate of her childhood, the companion of her youth —and another mourns over blasted hopes, blighted prospects—he weeps that one who was to have shared with him life's weal and woe—whose heart's confiding love to him had been given, should thus early find an untimely grave. All, all have lost a friend; words of comfort were but mockery to your afflicted hearts. Look from yon bright sphere, now thou art an angel, and whisper consolation—cheer the sorrowing heart, heal the broken one, and draw them by thine own sweet influence, from this delusive world to the better land,—bid them not weep for thee, for thou art blest, thrice blest. Passed away like the morning cloud —as the "star melts away into the light of Heaven," thus passed thy spirit, loved Josephine—ere the sorrows of earth had blighted it, back to its pure fount returned.
Why weep for thee, blest one? Rest thee—in Heaven.
Concord, N. H.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

GOAD'S patent graduated electro-galvanic apparatus, with patent insulated poles for medical and other purposes.

The undersigned is prepared to apply the above admirable, all pervading, pleasant, safe, and potent remedial agent, which has accomplished wonders, where all other remedies have failed, in the whole train of nervous and rheumatic complaints, (too numerous to be here particularized) and in the actual restoration of sight, speech, and hearing, where no destruction of the organ has taken place.
Most respectable proof from physicians and others will be exhibited at his apartments, south side Pennsylvania avenue, sixth house East of the market, and nearly opposite Brown's Hotel, where the splendid first size or largest apparatus will be kept in readiness at any hour, day or night, that may be appointed; and the second size for use abroad when required. He has received due instructions in their application from the inventor, for which he was previously prepared by many years' experience in the use of electricity in another form.

As this is a subject to which justice cannot be done in a newspaper advertisement, a communication will shortly be made to the public in another way, embracing opinions of eminent physicians of the apparatus, and selections from successfully treated cases.

The undersigned, having twenty-five years ago been in the practice, in certain cases, of aiding the operation of the electric fluid by relaxing the system during its use in the vapor bath, this salutary practice will be continued, the bath invented by him being peculiarly adapted to such service.

BOYD REILLY
P. S. B. R. has been appointed one of the general agents for the sale of apparatus and rights of use in places not already disposed of. Ladies and gentlemen who had not an opportunity of seeing them at the Capitol or Gadsby's Hotel are respectfully invited to examine and try their effects at his apartments; they will find them by no means shocking.
